Interview Tips

Interviewing can be stressful. The most important thing is to be yourself! We have also compiled a list of resources to help get you through the interview process. Please note: each company has a different interview style but, overall, this will help you get through the process.

1. Research the company before the interview. This may seem straight forward but, if you research the company, you will have specific questions you can ask them at the end of the interview process. Additionally, you will know if their missions and values align with yours.
2. Practice interviewing before the interview. Write specific examples down, greatest accomplishment, strengths, etc. Nerves can cause you to forget examples, so have a note pad with your examples written down. Practicing can also help ease the nerves.
3. STAR Interviewing. STAR is a very common interview practice. STAR stands for situation, task, action, result. Essentially, the team is looking for you to provide a situation or a problem, what you did to solve that problem, and the end results for the team.
   Example:
   Interviewer question: Do you have experience creating an excel document?
   Interviewee answer: Yes. For example, I created a document that summarized team expenses for the quarter. After reviewing the document, we found an area that was not being expensed properly. We addressed this issue and we have saved $10k in the past three quarters.
   Providing specific examples, and success stories will help you in the interview process.
4. After the interview ensure you have questions for the hiring managers. Ask about the team, expectations for the next six months, etc. Anything important to you, you should ask. Remember, while they are interviewing you, you are also interviewing them to ensure the company will be a good fit.
5. Finally, send a thank you email to each person who interviewed you. It is a nice touch and will keep you front of mind.
